The first hole at Angus Glen North is a 600 yard Par 5 which doglegs slightly to the left 320 yards off the back tee. Most players will play this as a three shot hole, but if the wind subsides some may try to hit the green in two.

The second hole is a medium length Par 4 characterized by a dramatic elevation change on the approach shot. The tee shot is played on to a plateau fairway with a bunker guarding the right side, leaving the player with a mid-to-short iron into a large but deceiving green.

The 3rd hole is a sharp dogleg left with mature oak trees guarding the approach shot. Three fairway bunkers frame the fairway and a smallish green surrounded by steep slopes makes an accurate approach a must. Players who find the right side of the fairway will be left with short irons in to this green making it a definite birdie opportunity.

The first Par 3 on the North Course is also the first hole to cross the Bruce Creek. The green is guarded by a large bunker on the right side & thick rough & trees which bound the left and rear of the playing surface. The green is divided by a severe slope causing any shot played short to roll back into the front collection area.

The 5th hole is a straight-away Par 5 that plays directly into the prevailing wind. The tee shot is played to a landing area narrowed by a fairway bunker on the right and deep fescue rough on the left. The approach to the green is challenged by a large deep bunker on the left and a grass bunker on the right. The green slopes back to front allowing long approaches to hold the green, making this a definite birdie hope.

The 11th hole is a slight dogleg left playing back into the prevailing wind and guarded by all that Mother Nature has to offer. The last 350 yards of the left side of the hole is dominated by a large pond and fairway and greenside bunkers perched precariously on the watery edge. The right side of the hole is framed by fescue and more sand to guide the player towards a small narrow green. Many a best laid plan has dissolved into frustration after holing out on eleven.

The 12th hole is another Par 4 dominated by a large pond down the left side of the hole. One of the more challenging tee shots sets up an approach to a large green guarded front and left by water and right by sand. The two-tiered green has plenty of nasty pin positions and should keep birdies at bay.

The 13th hole is an excellent risk/reward Par 4. Water dominates the tee shot, but an aggressive line leaves the player with a simple pitch to a medium sized green. A conservative line leaves the player with a short iron to a green whose slopes run off-angle to the approach. Decisions will be made harder by the winds, which often push tee shots into the big blue abyss.

The 15th hole is a long Par 5 whose water-menaced tee shot and double fairway approach create a challenging hole that will yield its share of birdies and bogeys. After the tee shot, the player has a choice of playing directly at the flag and risking a challenging third shot from the deep greenside bunker or playing left of the green and leaving a simple pitch to a large, relatively flat green.
